Using information to assist in the provision of mental health care, to support and encourage good practice, to facilitate the management of teams and services and to provide data which allows national comparisons are all central to the reform agenda which has been guided by the National Mental Health Strategy.

The Australian Mental Health Outcomes and Classification Network (AMHOCN,) in collaboration with SA Health, invite you to participate in a national forum that will explore the use of information to establish innovative practices that improve the quality of mental health services in Australia, including the use of outcome measures in clinical care.

Consumers, carers, clinicians, team leaders, service managers and those responsible for implementing mental health information policy initiatives are encouraged to attend and to also submit abstracts of presentations for the forum.
